  - School of Visual Art and Design (SVAD) students from the University of South Carolina's College of Arts and Sciences successfully completed a project for the South Carolina House Legislative Oversight Committee (HLOC), enhancing the committee's communication materials to be more accessible and effective. Over a three-week period, 13 graphic design students, led by Associate Professor Meena Khalili, worked to improve the readability of print materials, website accessibility, functionality, and overall impact of the committee's publications. The students met with HLOC members to understand their specific needs and were given the task of making a lasting impact on how the committee communicates with the public.
