Dear Mr. Schill and Mr. Barris:

The Committee on Education and Workforce (the Committee) is continuing to investigate Northwestern University's response to antisemitism on its campus. At a time when the use of federal funds is under intense scrutiny, there are indications that Northwestern has used its taxpayer-supported institutional resources for troubling purposes. The Community Justice and Civil Rights Clinic at Northwestern's Pritzker School of Law (Northwestern Law) is providing free legal representation in a civil suit to the organizers of an anti-Israel blockade of highway traffic to Chicago's O'Hare International Airport. This blockade resulted in the arrest of 40 participants.¹ The fact that Northwestern, a university supported by billions in federal funds, would dedicate its resources to support this illegal, antisemitic conduct raises serious questions.

One of the O'Hare blockade organizers that Northwestern Law is providing legal representation for is Rifqa Falaneh, a so-called "Justice Fellow" at the organization "Palestine Legal." Falaneh is a vocal antisemite and supporter of terrorism who has called for "many more October 7ths until full Liberation."² She has also written, "The moment you say 'release the hostages' you've exposed how dumb you in fact are,"³ "I won't be happy until every last bit of the [Z]ionist entity burns to the ground,”⁴ and “Who are [I]sraeli ‘civilians’? They are people who willingly choose to live in an occupied land as settlers...”⁵ It is troubling that Northwestern is supporting this individual and her efforts to support terrorism.

These concerns are particularly acute given Northwestern’s lengthy pattern of permissiveness and support for antisemitic conduct, as detailed in the Committee’s October 2024 report, “Antisemitism on College Campuses Exposed.”⁶ The report’s findings include that President Schill and Northwestern Provost Kathleen Hagerty empowered anti-Israel faculty to conduct negotiations with an illegal encampment at the university and that Provost Hagerty approved a proposal to boycott Sabra-brand hummus because of its perception as an Israeli product.⁷ Northwestern also recently allowed the return to campus of journalism professor Steven Thrasher, who was criminally charged for obstructing and physically struggling with police officers in an attempt to defend the illegal encampment.⁸

The clinic’s representation of the blockade organizers also raises broader concerns about the institutionalization of left-wing political activism at Northwestern Law. The school’s Community Justice and Civil Rights Clinic, led by clinical professor of law Sheila A. Bedi, uses Northwestern’s name and resources to engage in progressive-left political advocacy. The clinic describes itself as working “in collaboration with social justice movements on legal and policy strategies aimed at redressing some of the most pressing, urgent issues of our time—namely over-policing and mass imprisonment.”⁹

Students can receive academic credit with the support of federal student aid for engaging in this political advocacy in Northwestern Law’s “Movement Lawyering” class. The course description explains that students work with “collectives and community organizers” on “creating a more just Chicago” on matters such as a “court order aimed at transforming the Chicago Police Department.”¹⁰

While the Community Justice and Civil Rights Clinic's work is troubling, it is only one of numerous Northwestern Law clinics and centers promoting left-wing causes¹¹ Northwestern's decision to fund left-wing advocacy with its institutional resources heightens significant concerns about the university's role as a steward of taxpayer dollars.

Please produce the following no later than 12:00 p.m. EDT on April 10, 2025:

1. All written policies, procedures, and guidance relating to the function of legal clinics at Northwestern Law, including any written guidance on what constitutes appropriate work, and direction on appropriate client representations;
